

ABSTRACT

A telephone communication system includes a telephone device having a plurality of buttons, a memory and a processor; and a mechanism for storing a plurality of approved numbers in the memory associated with the button, the means being at least one of (1) remote from the telephone device, and (2) password protected; wherein the processor is adapted to allow outgoing calls to be placed by the telephone device only to the approved numbers.